Fetal arrhythmias are relatively common findings in clinical ultrasound examinations and fetal echocardiography studies. The reasons for fetal arrhythmias can be the result of fetal heart dysfunction or could be part of a normal variant. Fetal arrhythmias usually are associated with maternal complications or fetal malformations. Many of these complications can be detected early when observed on fetal echocardiography. The fetal echocardiographic detection of the presence or degree of an underlying fetal heart disease is an important prognostic factor for the future development of the fetus.While bagpipes may have died out over the centuries, they have nevertheless, unfortunately, managed to secure a niche among the choirs of today. It is especially apparent in the over-the-top street choirs of the Third World. So we found the following video that demonstrates just how well the bagpipes can be blended in with bad quality hip-hop. This video is done in the style of a power ballad, where all of the instruments are in the background while there is only one instrument (the bagpipes) in the foreground. The obvious problem with the performance is the bagpipes. It is difficult to pick out the individual bagpipes. They are all blended together as a single instrument. In fact, there are so many instruments that they get lost in the mix. A bagpipe only sounds good when the volume is turned way up. In fact, the bagpipes are kind of drowned out by the background music. Someone in the video even calls one of the bagpipes a "closer" that is "talking too loud." The only music that stands out are the words of the song. Fortunately, the bagpipes are not played throughout the entire song. In fact, it is played for just a short period of time. It is mainly played in the intro, and in parts of the verse. Unfortunately, the bagpipes are cut at the end of the song. Normally, a street choir will be much more
