The Personal Injury Safety Advisers Group (PISAG) recently released its new guide to lawyers for PISAG member injury prevention organizations (IPOs). The guide, which is available online, can be downloaded free of charge. The guide covers a variety of topics, such as: Defining what PISAG is Issues of responsibility with respect to summary judgment motions Pleading issues Closing arguments In reaching the conclusion that a summary judgment motion should be granted, a court should first consider whether the plaintiff has carried its burden of making out a prima facie case. Second, the court should ask whether it is "compelled by public policy or a compelling federal interest to deny summary judgment." Third, the court should determine whether the defendant has shown a "reasonable" basis for the claim. Finally, if both sides have met their summary judgment burdens and the court is required to determine whether the defendant has a burden of going forward, the court should decide whether the plaintiff has negated a material fact necessary for the defendant's defense. Although
